24 hours, 24 regions spanning the entire world.

From New Zealand to Hawaii, a full day for students, educators, experts and the general public to advocate and demonstrate change in education.

We know that schools need to change. That education systems worldwide are not preparing our students for the future, and not even for the present.

Join us globally and locally to create a living manifesto for change in education.

24 hours for change in education is a one-day event that will span the globe, starting in New Zealand and ending up in Hawaii, covering 24 time zones as we move around the world from east to west, advocating and mobilizing teachers, students and families, as well as some of the world's leading experts in education, to start changing now.

During every one of these one-hour blocks, through a live public streaming channel and videoconference interactions for participants, we will engage education stakeholders in actively advocating and demonstrating that change is possible, and can be jumpstarted now.

Hear from some of the world's most inspirational speakers and authors.

Give students worldwide a voice to tell us how and what they want to learn and how they think they learn best.

Share best practices, live from schools in each region.

Engage the public in interactive discussions on how schools can create a better future.

A worldwide gallery of resources for change in education

Each of the slots will be demonstrating how change can happen right now, through best practices, real-life school innovation, a wide-ranging blueprint for change in education. Every one of these interactions, resources and reflections will be recorded on the site and accessible to educators worldwide, providing a one-stop repository of resources on educational change.
